Your Food is Slathered in Pesticides

What else are they hiding?

By: SCIENCE BY INTERNET

We heard from our fifth cousin removed by a friend's mother's second marriage that they heard that someone somewhere in the U.S. may have seen a farmer apply pesticides to their crops and it looked like A LOT.

We have no idea what they're dousing our food with, and we all know that if we simply inquire about their farming practices they will lie to protect their nefarious scheme to overtake the human race with these toxic chemicals. It only makes sense that farmers want to kill the very people who buy the food they grow and support their livelihood. Next week - I'll uncover where Midwestern farmers are hiding extraterrestrial life.

In reality, pesticides are applied sparingly (as low as three ounces per acre).

If farmers slathered on crop protection like we slather on sunscreen, say at a ratio of half an ounce for the area of your face, farmers would have to use more than 54,000 ounces per acre.
